Planning for Immigrant and Multi-Ethnic Communities

The surge in immigration over the past two decades has engendered an unprecedented level of racial, ethnic and cultural diversity in the United States.

While communities are well attuned to the diversification and globalization of U.S. cities and towns, how they can respond to these trends in practice is less well understood. This forum will present an overview of some key concepts, trends and issues to consider when planning in immigrant and multi-ethnic contexts. A variety of tools (along with their advantages and drawbacks) will be presented to 1) explore a range of possible planning approaches and tactics for communities with large immigrant populations and 2) illustrate how these approaches can enrich planning practice more generally.
